SPENCER GRAY / BOTANICAL PHOTOGRAPHY

LIVING STRUCTURE

A COMPANION TO NO FIXED PATH / 02

Small subject. Complex world.

A flower can be read at more than one scale. From across a room it is a living plant; closer in, it becomes leaf, resin, curl and surface.

This selection moves from the growing room to the individual specimen. It brings forward photographs from Spencer Gray's cannabis albums, with space to see the differences between a whole form and the detail held inside it. Names follow the source archive; where no cultivar is established, the plant is left unnamed.

A FLOWER BECOMES A LANDSCAPE

Look closer. Then look again.

The subject does not need to become something else to be extraordinary. A change in distance is enough.
