The only place that felt like home.

MT. HOOD / c.2018-2020

Photographs and recollections
Spencer Gray

I spent roughly 2018 through late 2020 at the cabin on Mt. Hood.

It was the only place that ever felt like home.

The isolation and the time in nature helped me find myself.

The cabin. The forest. Biggie Smalls.
A record of the place around that change.

DEAD END

Something familiar.

THE SAME GREEN CABIN / APRIL 2020

Home is a large word for ordinary things.
A doorway. A chair. The trees outside.

LIFE IS BETTER AT THE CABIN / APRIL 2020

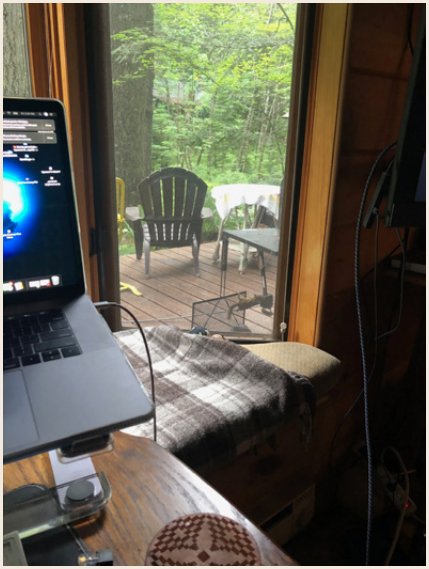

The photographs keep bringing me back to the small things that made up a life here.

THE PORCH CHAIR / APRIL 2020

THE VIEW FROM INSIDE / MAY 2020

A screen. A window. Lunch outside.
The creative life and the ordinary one, sharing a room.

WOOD AT THE CABIN / MAY 2020

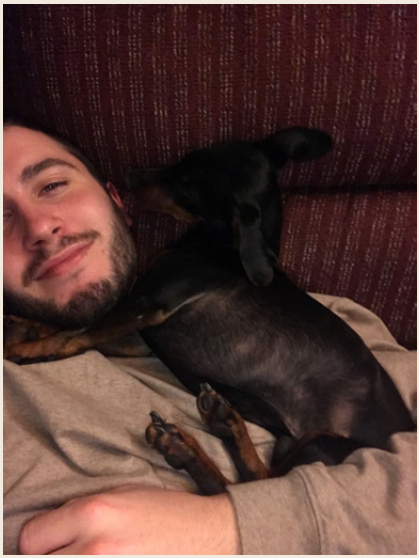

Biggie Smalls.

BIGGIE IN THE BLANKETS / JANUARY 2020

BIGGIE SMALLS ON THE PATH / AUGUST 2020

Biggie belongs in this story of home.
So do the people who passed through it.

BIGGIE IN THE HAMMOCK / AUGUST 2020

The place was in the trees, and in the company.

BIGGIE AND THE ROOM / FEBRUARY 2020

The forest had smaller stories, too.
Looking down changed the scale of the world.

A MUSHROOM ON THE FOREST FLOOR / AUGUST 2019

IN HAND / OCTOBER 2019

A find in the woods.
Someone to show it to.

A different kind of collection.
Shapes, colours, the detail of a cap.

THE FORAGING TABLE / OCTOBER 2019

The isolation and time spent in nature helped me find myself.

Attention became part of the story.

FERN STUDY / APRIL 2020

Space to hear myself.

LAKE AND FOREST / AUGUST 2020

A creative streak.

LSD and psychedelics were a large part of that time in my life. My experiments with them helped spark a creative streak in me.

LSD helped me believe in myself and loosen the idea of what I was supposed to do. It gave me fuel to pursue a creative path without fear.

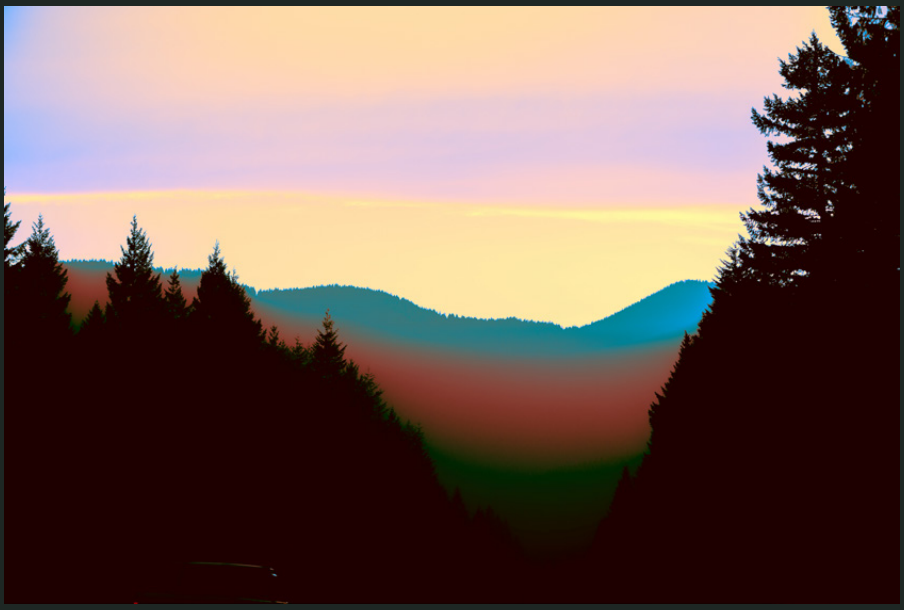

What I keep returning to is belief in myself: the sense that I could follow a creative path.

LSD TAB / AUGUST 20, 2020

Colour could change the feeling of a room.

MAGENTA LIGHT AND FRANK OCEAN IN PRINT / AUGUST 2020

An existing photograph, seen another way.

SUNSET / EXISTING COLOUR INTERPRETATION / AUGUST 2020

I was starting to trust what I wanted to make.

MIRROR PHOTOGRAPH / JANUARY 2020

There were forms everywhere
I could slow down enough to see.

A SMALL BRANCHING WORLD / APRIL 2020

Biggie Smalls. The trees.
A way back to the familiar.

BIGGIE AND COMPANY OUTSIDE / AUGUST 2019

AN OREGON MUG IN THE SNOW / NOVEMBER 2019

THE CABIN SIGN IN WINTER / NOVEMBER 2019

Home could fit in the small things.
A meal. A room. A place to return to.

A MEAL AT HOME / MAY 2020

BIGGIE, RESTING / OCTOBER 2019

© Spencer Gray

The isolation and time in nature helped me find myself.

The photographs can hold the place.
The feeling is harder to put a border around.

BIGGIE SMALLS ON THE PATH / AUGUST 2020

“That place was the only place that ever felt like home.”

Spencer Gray

01 The green cabin / December 2017
02 A path through the forest / September 2018
03 The lane / August 2018
04 The same green cabin / April 2020
05 Life is better at the cabin / April 2020
06 The porch chair / April 2020
07 The view from inside / May 2020
08 A screen and a window / June 2020
09 Lunch outside / August 2020
10 Wood at the cabin / May 2020
11 Biggie in the blankets / January 2020
12 Biggie Smalls on the path / August 2020
13 Biggie and company / January 2018
14 Company at the cabin / February 2018
15 Biggie in the hammock / August 2020
16 Biggie and the room / February 2020
17 The hammock by the water / May 2020
18 Looking up / September 2018
19 A mushroom on the forest floor / August 2019
20 In hand / October 2019
21 Gathered around the table / October 2019
22 A portrait in the forest / October 2019
23 The foraging table / October 2019
24 Fern study / April 2020
25 Daisy / July 2020
26 Fallen trunks over water / June 2020
27 Lake and forest / August 2020
28 LSD tab / August 20, 2020
29 Magenta light and Frank Ocean in print / August 2020
30 Sunset / existing colour interpretation / August 2020
31 Mirror photograph / January 2020
32 A small branching world / April 2020
33 Forest steps / April 2020
34 Biggie and company outside / August 2019
35 An Oregon mug in the snow / November 2019
36 The cabin sign in winter / November 2019
37 A meal at home / May 2020
38 Biggie, resting / October 2019
39 Lake / existing colour treatment / August 2020
40 An empty hammock / April 2020

Full source provenance is retained in the editable production package.

A cabin journal from the Mt. Hood archive.

Photographs and recollections: Spencer Gray.

The cabin period is recalled as roughly 2018 through late 2020. The opening and returning photograph of the green cabin is recorded December 2017. The sequence follows memory and feeling rather than a strict chronology.

The narrative was shaped from Spencer's own account of home, isolation, nature, Biggie Smalls, and the influence of LSD and psychedelics on self-belief and creativity. The tab photograph was confirmed by Spencer.

Existing colour treatments are retained. No new artwork, generative retouching, replacement detail or artificial enlargement was used. Phone photographs are presented as small, intimate prints. Unnamed people remain unnamed; mushroom captions describe the photographs without assigning species.

A separate companion to No Fixed Path / October 2026.
Editorial and design assistance: Codex.

A way back to myself.